by recognizing the contributions of 17 Iowa and Ohio agricultural teachers. As a result of the positive response from the communities in which Golden Owl Award nominees make a difference, the 2019-20 Golden Owl Award was expanded to recognize 31 outstanding educators across five states: California, Illinois, Iowa, Ohio and Pennsylvania. Now in 2020-21, the award is expanding again to include Indiana and New York.

“We’re proud to recognize outstanding teachers for their dedication to agriculture education in their farming communities,” said Brad Liggett, president of agribusiness for Nationwide. “This award symbolizes the hard work that individual teachers have put into agriculture education to help students pursue their passion for farming.”

“New York State is home to many outstanding educators who are inspiring our next generation of farmers. They often open the door for many students to farming, connecting them to where their food comes from. New York Farm Bureau values agricultural education as well, and we appreciate Nationwide’s Golden Owl Award, honoring these men and women who give so much of themselves to create an understanding and appreciation for the profession we value and serve,” said Elizabeth Dribusch, NYFB Chief Executive Officer.

Following the nomination period, an established selection committee will evaluate nominations received and select eleven (11) finalists. Each finalist will receive an individualized plaque and $500 to support their agriculture programs. During the 2021 New York FFA State Convention, one finalist will be crowned the 2020-21 New York Agricultural Educator of the Year and will receive the coveted Golden Owl Award trophy and $3,000 to help fund future educational efforts.

As the number one farm insurer in the United States, Nationwide supports the future of the agricultural community through meaningful sponsorships of national and local organizations. In conjunction with the Golden Owl Award, Nationwide is donating $5,000 to each participating state’s FFA, including the New York FFA, to further support the personal and professional growth of students, teachers and advisors alike. and the greenhouse gas mitigation of the land while also attempting to ensure a less variable climate for future farmers,” said Jennifer Wightman, a research associate in the Soil and Crop Sciences Section of the School of Integrative Plant Science, in the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, and the study’s first author.

“In an industrialized state like New York, we need every sector to step up and make a contribution to mitigating climate change,” said co-author Peter Woodbury, senior research associate in the Soil and Crop Sciences Section. “There’s the opportunity to do that with agriculture and forestry while also getting other benefits” such as improved profitability and cleaner air and water, he said.

Though people mostly focus on carbon emissions, the authors said it’s important to account for three greenhouse gases produced on farms: carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide.

The report identified practices that can help agriculture sequester GHGs more permanently from the atmosphere, as opposed to temporary fixes.

“Because climate change is a 100-, 300-, 1,000-year project,” Wightman said, “we want to make sure that we’re supporting projects that lead to permanent greenhouse gas emission reductions and aren’t just temporary.”

Wightman and Woodbury have also authored a companion report, “Sources and Sinks of Major Greenhouse Gases associated with New York State’s Natural and Working Lands: Forests, Farms, and Wetlands” (2020), commissioned by the New York State Energy Research and Development Authority.

USDA Awards Urban Agriculture Grants

The USDA recently announced the selection of 15 New York FFA chapters and Advisors and American FFA for 2019-20 to receive $5,000 to each participating state’s FFA, including the New York FFA, to further support the personal and professional growth of students, teachers and advisors alike.
